Regarding the intent to begin Commission meetings with a religious invocation, I am writing to protest this action.

One of the basic tenets our Founding Fathers included in the Constitution was separation of church and state. Bringing prayer by clergy of any religion into a public government meeting violates that intent. People of all faiths have plenty of opportunity to practice their religion without bringing it into government.

I read that the Board consulted local pastors about this issue. I wonder if rabbis or ayatollahs or imams or lamas were also consulted.

Religion has no place in government.
