To vote, a definition: the right to indicate a choice in an election.

The board of commissioners is here to represent the community and whatever it is the said community voted for. In a real election. With a ballot. Whether the commissioners agree with the outcome or not. That's how it works.

Four commissioners raising their hands in an attempt to overturn the actual will of the people is a disturbing move and an overreach of power.

At the very base of all of this, we need representatives that believe in the laws of elections, no matter what year the election took place or how many people showed up to vote. It is what democratic societies are built upon.

KEEP THE MILLAGE FUNDING AS THE PEOPLE VOTED FOR IT.

Please present this letter to all commissioners before this evening's meeting.

Signed one disturbed citizen (again),
Molly Donahue
